You could have a tripped breaker. The dryer will run with only one of the 120 volt legs of 240 volt power supplied to the dryer. If the second 120 volt leg is missing, the dryer will not heat. I recommend checking the breakers first. If the breakers are okay, the next step is normally to check the voltage at the outlet for the dryer using the diagram in the first image below. NOTE: You should only check the live voltage with a volt/ohm meter if you are completely confident in your technical ability to safely measure it. If the breakers and outlet are both okay, you could have one of the following failures that would prevent your dryer from heating: Blown thermal cut-off fuse Open high limit thermostat Failed heating element Bad heater relay on the electronic control board Failed motor centrifugal switch Bad thermistor (temperature sensor) Wiring failure between components in the heating circuit I recommend calling a service technician to diagnose and repair this type of failure in your dryer.
